For high-end cameras, a photographer has a choice of focal length lens or zoom lens and an optical viewfinder to guide the camera as it focuses. The choice is often made based on the type of picture you're taking. For example, a wide-angle lens lets you capture a lot in a small space, whereas a longer lens lets you capture a large amount of space and zoom into the distance. A zoom lens lets you capture a wider angle of view than a normal lens. A pentaprism viewfinder helps you see the image in front of the lens when the shutter is activated.

Q: Django JsonResponse fails to handle Unicode strings while Response.ok() works correctly I have an AJAX request I have been struggling with. The request sends a JSON string which contains a Unicode character. If I turn on debug mode I can see that the Unicode string contains the correct characters. However, when I call jsonResponse.ok(), I get the following error: UnicodeEncodeError at /ajax_test/ 'ascii' codec can't encode character u'\xe2' in position 0: ordinal not in range(128) What's going on here? The string is unicode and it's displaying properly in the debugger. Why won't jsonResponse.ok() handle the Unicode strings correctly? Here is the AJAX request method: @login_required @require_post def ajax_test(request, id): return JsonResponse({'type': 'json'}) Here is my view: @method_decorator(login_required, name='dispatch') class AjaxHomeView(ListView): model = User template_name = 'index.html' page_title = _('User Center') def get_context_data(self, kwargs): context = super(AjaxHomeView, self).get_context_data(kwargs) print('check %r' % context) context['data'] = self.model.objects.all() context['total_pages'] = User.objects.all().count() context['page'] = self.request.GET.get('page', 1) context['table_columns'] = ['id', 'name', 'last_login', 'last_ip',] return context

Despite the successful public rollout, the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996 (HIPAA) is far from 100 percent effective, says Jayne Grant, president of the Pennsylvania State Board of Dentistry, which sought to address the issue of dental neglect through the use of a technology system that collects, analyses and collates information from multiple sources. “All of the information is confidential and I’m not allowed to discuss it – but it’s all validated data. It can tell me about any patient who has a need for treatment, or if they’ve been seen in the system,” she says. “We collect patient and practice census data, as well as patient background information such as birth date, gender, prior insurance status, procedure information, lab results and medical insurance billing history. We also collect fee schedule and insurance information, and update information on each practitioner, allowing us to accurately assess the extent of the dental neglect and whether it’s within a network provider.” However, says Grant, there is one major challenge in carrying out the plan. “Patients have been given identification numbers so they can’t be identified. I’m working on ways to have their patient numbers displayed. We can still access everyone’s entire data, but it’s anonymous – that way, we can’t connect the data to a specific individual.” The system is also able to provide an overview of both geographical and provider-based data. “So, for example, if you have a patient who seems to be struggling to get an appointment, we can show that doctors are geographically close to that patient and that we’ve had problems with seeing a particular provider.” Utilising the information gained, Grant believes the system has helped to increase the group’s visibility in an already crowded dental market. “By ensuring our patients are having preventive dental care, we’re reducing the amount of treatment that we have to provide.” Annually, the board collects data on more than 350,000 practice profiles and associates of more than 12,000 active dentists. “The Board sends this information to the dental schools and dental colleges, which in turn sends it to the United States Dental Association,” Grant says. In fact, it was through the association that we found out about the technology system, she adds
